NON-TRANSPORTABLE GOODS

Non-transportable goods are a serious consideration when moving. These household goods can range from high-value jewelry to hazardous materials. It is imperative that your irreplaceable goods, such as family heirlooms, sensitive documents, all prescription drugs are labeled as non-transportable goods. Recognizing your household goods that should not be packed and moved to keep your move stress free from any harm that could be caused by transporting them.

FCMSI put a list of examples together of non-transportable goods you should not pack or that we cannot pack and transport with the bulk of your household goods. Please take a look at the list, and determine how to handle the non-transportable goods for your move. At FCMSI, we strive to keep the stress out of moving and your best interest and safety at heart during your time of service.

The items listed below are examples that all moving companies, by federal law or internal policy, cannot transport.

Hazardous materials such as explosives, compressed gases, flammable liquids and solids, oxidizers, poisons, corrosives and radioactive materials are not allowed for transport.

Please keep these non-transportable goods in mind when prepping for your move. Transporting hazardous materials is dangerous to your movers' and other drivers' safety. These goods can easily be repurchased when you get to your new residence. Keeping high-value items with you at all times during a move, as these belongings are often expensive and/or irreplaceable, will keep your mind at ease. Prescription drugs are BEST kept on you at all times. Many prescription drugs are needed daily and/or several times a day and you do not want to risk the chance of misplacing medication.

With these key factors provided to you, we plan to keep you and your movers' safety a priority.
